ELECTROMAGNETIC INDUCTION LOOP ANNOUNCED

The Music Department of the University of Maryland's Baltimore campus is pleased to announce the first operating Electromagnetic Induction Loop System for the hearing impaired public in the state of Maryland.

The loop system was installed in the UMBC Fine Arts Recital Hall to give hearing handicapped people the opportunity to share in both sight and sound during concerts, production and lectures offered to the community by the UMBC Music Department.

The Electromagnetic Induction Principle uses a microphone to pick up the sounds of the performers. An amplifier boosts the microphone signal which is then sent to a wire loop that encompasses the listening area. The wire loop acts as a transmitter of electromagnetic information to the receiver of a hearing aid, and the wearer perceives the music or speech. There are no connecting wires between the electromagnetic induction loop and the hearing aid. The hearing handicapped person is free to move about the room at will always receiving a constant level of sound.

The technical and physical layouts are the work of Bill Tudor and Fred Rosen. The Organization for Use of the Telephone has been instrumental in supplying technical data for the installation of the "Loop".

For more information regarding the Loop and the Music Concert Series in the Hall, please contact the UMBC Music Department at 455-2942.
